Customer Reviews

An eccentric teacher takes her class on an adventure through the city waterworks and teaches science painlessly. Ages 6-9. Copyright 1988 Reed Business Information, Inc.

Grade 2-4A remarkable meshing of text and illustration make this an outstanding, lively treatment of a subject for which there is very little written for this age group. Ms. Frizzle has assigned her class a month-long investigation of how their city gets its water supply, to be followed by a field trip to the water works. With "The Friz" as driver, the children encounter surprise after surprise, as they are magically clad in scuba gear while in a tunnel, then slowly ascend to a cloud, where each child disembarks; falls as a drop of water into a mountain stream; flows into a reservoir; and bounces through the purification system, pipes, and water mains under the city streets. The trip ends with all arriving, drop by drop, in the girls' bathroom in their school as a seventh grader turns on the water faucet. A subsequent classroom mural is drawn of their field trip with the interesting facts of water posted above. Not such a bad trip after all! Liveliness and humor combine to provide valuable information in a simple, explicit text, totally complemented by cheery cartoon-like illustrations. A finishing flourish are the two pages of humorous and lighthearted notes (for SERIOUS students only) at the text's end. This book will rarely sit on the shelf. Grandson loves Magic School Bus!

Love these fun learning books! My daughter thinks they are very interesting and enjoys learning and reading.

My daughter enjoyed the book very much

My 3.5 year old child loves these Magic School Bus books. For those we can find at the library, we're happy to borrow, but many of them are not available there. Thankfully we were able to find one she liked (who knew toddlers were so fascinated with waterworks?), order it, and receive it in a timely manner.

My Grandchildren just love this series. They want it read over and over and talk about the pictures the whole time I'm reading. There is so much happening on each page.

I am now sharing these wonderful books with another generation of inquisitive minds. This one answers so many questions! and it lasted in that young brain all night and came up again at breakfast. Just turning on the water faucet is now a starter of intelligent conversation.

Great exploration of science!

I loved reading these books when I was younger, even though I am in college I still love to read them in my somewhat free time.
